

low pressure

blurring silver craters fragments thundering across the vast expanse of darkness searing the solid aluminium nuclear fusion contrasting the emptiness the sound of a low pressure alarm broke my thoughts away from the star and there it was slowly boiling the low pressure turning my blood into a gas the curved aluminium wreckage gently drifting away as my supply of nitrogen and oxygen propelled me forward at 101 newtons
like a small thruster into unconsciousness why do we do this to our own species when we could achieve so much together so much more than petty conflict over dyson swarm panels they say war is glorious they say the brave men and women who died for the cause are heroes it is but the old lie: it is sweet and honourable to die for a dyson swarm panel
